

Nicholas Shipley

Principal Consultant—DeakinPrime

Nicholas Shipley is a Principal Consultant at DeakinPrime, the corporate education arm of Deakin University. DeakinPrime is a pioneer and leader in the development of corporate education partnerships with organisations in Australia, reaching over 50,000 people in work each year.

Nicholas has extensive experience in the design and implementation of collaborative education programs gained from senior roles in vocational and higher education and in corporate organisational development and consultancy.

Prior to joining DeakinPrime Nicholas worked as General Manager of a leading vocational college, and played an instrumental role in pioneering new models of productive education as Director of Work-based Learning Programs at the University of Technology Sydney. He gained further experience with work-centred learning and development in his role as Executive Manager of Business Capability with a leading retail bank.

Since then, Nicholas has worked primarily as a consultant in professional education in Australia and as a social marketing and capacity-building adviser for international non-government organisations in Southeast Asia. He has been an education adviser and Chair of education committees for membership and regulatory organisations, taught at a number of universities and also contributed to publications in marketing and education.

Nicholas holds a number of university qualifications from the UK, USA and Australia. These include a Master of Business (Marketing) and a Master of Arts (Collaborative Education Partnerships).

Nicholas lives with his family in the Dandenong Ranges.
